We trust that, with our next Volume, we shall be able to give a more extensive, and perhaps in several Respects a more correct List of the Encouragers of this Undertaking. We have to regret the Want of a Number of Names which have not yet come to Hand; as we have not received Lists of the Subscribers in New York, in Baltimore, and in several other Places.

TERMS

ON WHICH THE FOLLOWING WORK IS PUBLISHED.

A NUMBER will be issued every Saturday; and contain at least 32 large octavo pages, handsomely printed on a fine substantial paper.

The type (cast purposely for the Work) is of the same size with that used for the Encyclopædia; and will be renewed as often as it appears worn.

Subscribers to pay one eighth of a dollar on the delivery of each number. Those, however, who prefer quarterly volumes neatly half-bound and lettered, to pay, in advance, a dollar and three fourths for every such volume.

For the purpose of binding, Subscribers will be furnished, every three months, with a Title page, and Index or Table of Contents, free of expence.

Persons residing at a distance, and desiring to encourage the undertaking, are requested to send their orders to their friends in Philadelphia, as the Editor cannot engage to deliver copies out of the city unless previously paid for.

Communications (poſt paid) will be duly attended to; and every thing conducive to the deſign of the Work will be gratefully received.——Subſcriptions received at the Printing Office, Lætitia Court; at James Watters's, Willing's Alley, near the Old Chapel Yard; and by the different Bookſellers in Philadelphia; by Alexander Somerville, New York; and by George Hill, Baltimore.

To the Public.

THE favourable reception which Literary Magazines have generally received, and the continued ſupport afforded to thoſe which have been ably conducted, render a recommendation of ſuch publications unneceſſary. Nothing more is preſumed on the preſent occaſion, than to offer a few obſervations particularly relative to the one now ſubmitted to the public.

The Weekly Magazine will contain ſuch original productions as may be offered, or can be obtained; ſelections from the moſt rare and approved works; and ſuch intereſting intelligence as can be procured from actual obſervation, or an examination of new publications. In choice and ſelection ſtrict attention will be paid to the merit of eſſays and other pieces of compoſition, with a proper regard to the diverſity of taſte. The extent and variety of matter, which will naturally claim a place in this publication, muſt neceſſarily limit the quantity of room to be occupied by intelligence; therefore, in this diviſion of the Work, a ſketch of occurrences, of legiſlative proceedings, and ſuch other articles as may be uſefully and properly introduced, will be occaſionally given. In ſhort, the object of this Magazine is the ſame with that of the moſt reſpectable; and the plan adopted for its attainment is one whoſe eſſential principles have afforded a long and flouriſhing exiſtence to ſeveral European publications.

The Propoſer is aware of the labour and perſeverance which the undertaking will require. He knows knows alſo that he will need the aſſiſtance of perſons of talents and erudition; but he is confident that a liberal encouragement from the Public will enable him to engage ſuch in the ſervice of the Work. The printing and riſk of pecuniary loſs will depend upon himſelf: he has been entruſted, upwards of two years, with the management of the office and printing of Mr. Dobſon, American Editor of the Encyclopædia; he has given ſatisfaction in that ſituation; and he means to confine himſelf to the preſent undertaking. Hence, in addition to other powerful motives, a regard to reputation and private emolument will induce him to uſe every exertion to render the Work acceptable to his fellow citizens. Impreſſed with the idea that they will encourage what they approve, and convinced that their encouragement will ſecure reſpectability to the undertaking, he reſpectfully ſubmits to their attentive examination the following volume.
